FAREWELL BALLADS.

Here lies a man who rarely race is run;
He raised the hammer of his arm so high;
And bled into the music just because
He wished to see if it was loud, and it was.

Here lies a man who one day found an old battlefield;
But whether it was charged or not he could not tell;
He struck it with an ax to satisfy his mind;
Friends buried here as much of him as they could find.

Here lies a man who wangled that he could drink;
A quart of rum at once and never wish;
He won the bet—that fact is very plain;
He drank the rum and never wangled again.

Step lightly, stranger, for the man who lies
Beneath this mound at twenty years' lesson plus;
He may be a good man, but he has been ill;
For pines are mighty hard to dig.

—Colonel James Christie.
